5 Things to Know for December 1, 2022

This issue of the Five Things is very brief.

Conservation

Is Everyone's Business

Dear Thomas,

As we write this issue of the Five Things, we are sitting in the December 1 meeting of the Washington State Conservation Commission. We are also facing difficult travel conditions due to snow in the region. For these reasons, this issue of the Five Things will be brief.

1 – WACD annual conference report

- Good feedback. The chatter we've been hearing after the conference has been positive. Folks did not feel pressed to run to different sessions. The overall atmosphere was fairly warm and relaxed, with many great conversations occurring between attendees. The sessions presented useful information and the speakers were knowledgeable and welcome. One difficulty we faced was repeated problems getting the conference packet delivered on time from the printer, so we may select a different printer next year.
- Resolutions. We will get the final resolutions posted and summarized next week.
- Bylaws changes. As with resolutions, we'll get these changes posted next week.
- Sponsors. We have a great suite of sponsors this year. It will take us a few weeks to get the sponsor list updated. We include sponsors near the bottom of every issue of the Five Things and we encourage you to get to know what services and products they can provide for your conservation work.

2 – Legislative Day is set for February 8

Please mark your calendars for February 8 for Legislative Day. This event helps conservation districts connect with legislators. Contact Ryan Baye for more information.

And that's it for this issue!
